R. LEO AUERBACH entertained a number of his friends at a stng social Wednesday evening at his home, corner Boulevard and Austin streets. The guests had a most enjoyable evening and voted the genial doctor a princely bost.

Music, games and story telling occupied the evening. E. C. Knickmeyer and Leo Rosenfeld presided at the plane in turn and rendered some splendid solo selections as well as accompaniments for others musically inelined. Dr. Auerbach also found time clined. Dr. Auerbach also found time between serving ars guests with refreshments to render several piano selections and he and Mr. Knickmeyer also gave several duets.

L. Phelan, of Parral, rendered several selections on the octarina, and had to respond to numerous encores.

As the champion entertainer, Sig. Schwabe was voted a medal. In initiations, singing and dancing, he was a whole entertainment himself. His renditions of Italian opera were not only well done musically, but his buricague gestures made his performance most amusing.

Crawford Harvie sung a number of Scotch songs and led the entire company at times in various familiar selections like "The River Shannon," "Old Kentucky Home," etc.

A number of games entertained those and the content son musically inclined.

A number of games entertained those who were not so musically inclined. The games were not kissing games such as children play when they gather for a social time, but they were interesting—to the participants—and they must have been patriotic, for their were numbers of red, white and blue discs in evidence and the object of the game appeared to be to see who could get most of them. Dr. W. H. Anderson appeared to be chief instructor in patriotism, for he appeared to have most of the patriotic little discs most of the pine, and he seemed to be livmost of the patriotic little discs most of the time, and he seemed to be giving instructions to several of the others, particularly Dr. W. R. Jamieson, who frequently had to ask for more of the pretty little colored things.

Dr. Auerbach's valet. In immagniate white, slipped silently among the guests during the evening, distributing the refreshments and the cigars, and the surroundings were thus made quite natural to the club members present, although Dr. Jamleson frequently compliance of 'the service' and thought it ought to be better.

Nevertheless, everybody had a splendid time and voted Dr. Amerbach a builty host, when they said farewell some time after the inidnight hour and took their departure.
